JUDGE FREES PRESIDENT REAGAN'S WOULD-BE KILLER HINCKLEY

John Hinckley Jr., who wounded President Ronald Reagan and three other people in a 1981 assassination attempt prompted by his obsession with actress Jodie Foster, can be freed from a psychiatric hospital to live with his mother, a federal judge ruled. U.S. District Judge Paul Friedman said Hinckley, 61, who was found not guilty by reason of insanity in a 1982 trial, no longer posed a danger to himself or others. He said Hinckley could be released from St. Elizabeth's, a government psychiatric hospital in Washington, as soon as Aug. 5, subject to nearly three dozen conditions. "Since 1983, when he last attempted suicide, he has displayed no symptoms of active mental illness, exhibited no violent behavior, shown no interest in weapons, and demonstrated no suicidal ideation," Friedman said of Hinckley in a 103-page opinion. BALTIMORE PROSECUTOR DROPS POLICE CHARGES IN FREDDIE GRAY CASE

Baltimore's top prosecutor dropped all remaining charges against police officers tied to the death of black detainee Freddie Gray, after failing four times to secure convictions in a case that inflamed the U.S. debate on race and justice. Prosecutor Marilyn Mosby had stunned the city and became a national figure by filing charges against six officers just days after Gray's death from a broken neck suffered in a police van sparked protests and rioting in April 2015. The death of the 25-year-old was one in a series of high-profile deaths of black suspects at the hands of U.S. police that stoked a national debate on police tactics and the treatment of minorities. It fueled the rise of the Black Lives Matter movement. REUTERS

FED KEEPS RATES UNCHANGED, SAYS RISKS TO OUTLOOK REDUCED

The Federal Reserve left interest rates unchanged on Wednesday but said near-term risks to the U.S. economic outlook had diminished, opening the door to a resumption of monetary policy tightening this year. The U.S. central bank said the economy had expanded at a moderate rate and job gains were strong in June. It added that household spending also had been "growing strongly," and pointed to an increase in labor utilization. While Fed policymakers said they continued to closely monitor inflation data and global economic and financial developments, they indicated less worry about possible shocks that could push the U.S. economy off course. On a sun-drenched stage under the Kimmel Center's vaulted glass ceiling, women in politics and their supporters celebrated breaking through another glass ceiling: the one Hillary Clinton smashed after clinching the Democratic presidential nomination the previous day.

Emily's List, a political action committee dedicated to helping women reach elected offices, threw an afternoon fete Wednesday, where keynote speakers addressed hundreds of delegates, speaking on the historic nature of Clinton's nomination, retelling their own struggles and triumphs in overcoming sexism and buckling down on their mission to ensure greater female representation in politics.

"This is really your victory. This is really your night," Clinton said via satellite to a crowd of cheering supporters Tuesday night, once delegates elected the former secretary of state. "And if there are any little girls out there who stayed up late to watch, let me just say I may become the first woman president. But one of you is next."

Clinton will give her acceptance speech Thursday night in person, just miles from Independence Hall where the nation was conceived. Party discord aside, the weight of Clinton's nomination is palpable.

"Today, we are here to celebrate history, but let's face it: It's 'her-story,'" quipped Katie McGinty, a Northeast Philly native and U.S. Senate candidate.

"What we know is that when women are not empowered, America is not empowered," McGinty told a cheering crowd. "Together, we have to change it. Together, we will change it. Because as Hillary would say, we are 'stronger together.'"

The former environmental adviser to Bill Clinton added: "We will ensure that for my daughters and yours, that they get to grow up in a world that everyone who works hard has the same chance to succeed."

Clinton's work in advancing the rights of women has been at the forefront of this convention, and women seem to be her loudest allies. They recall the day when, in 1995, the then-first lady declared in Beijing that "women's rights are human rights."

New York Sen. Chuck Schumer praised the role of women in politics at the Emily's List event.

"Women are key," the senior senator said in reference to the ongoing fight to protect a woman's right to choose and women's health. "Women make better candidates than men.

"If we don't elect Hillary Rodham Clinton as president and we don't take back the Senate, America is going to have big, big trouble."

Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren, drew wild reactions from the crowd. The standard-bearer for the Democratic Party's progressive wing, told the audience about her own battle to shatter the glass ceiling when, just five years ago, she left her career as a professor and ran for public office. One friend, she recalled, said the job might be better suited for a man.

"What it fundamentally says," Warren explained, "is no matter how smart you are, no matter how hard you try, no matter how much you get out there ... there's going to be some number of people — even your friends — who think you can't do this for the sole reason because you're a woman.

"For everyone who thinks it doesn't matter anymore, women can run just like men can run and it's all just the same, pause to ask why are women 20 percent of the United States Senate when we're 50 percent of the population."

Fence-jumpers free from federal custody

Four pro-Bernie protesters who faced jail time were set free in Philly federal court.

Two days into the Democratic National Convention, predictions of mass arrests to keep order in Philadelphia had turned out to be a bust — a few dozen protesters had been issued municipal citations, but none had been taken to jail.

Until Tuesday night, when four Bernie Sanders supporters scaled the fence around the Wells Fargo Center where Democrats nominated Hillary Clinton as their presidential nominee, entering an off-limits security zone set up by the Secret Service.

Anna Marie Sternberg, one of the four, said she vaulted the fence to protest "the death throes of our democracy."

"I see the students fighting really hard," said Sternberg, 69, of California, who plans to vote for Green Party candidate Jill Stein. "I came here to support them and stand up for our democracy. We need to get it back."

But unlike 59 protesters who were briefly detained and fined $50 after being cited for similar activities as the DNC kicked off in Philadelphia this week, Sternberg and three other fence-jumpers were arrested by the Secret Service on misdemeanor charges of entering restricted grounds. The charges could carry up to a year in prison.

Sternberg was arrested around 8:30 p.m. Tuesday along with Barbara Burns, of Boston, Katherine Roberts, of North Carolina, and James Williams, of Maryland. They were detained overnight in the city's federal detention center before all four were released on their own recognizance after a hearing Wednesday afternoon.

Defense attorney Trevan Borum, who is representing Burns, said the protesters didn't realize they would get treated differently than previous protesters who just got fines.

"I think that her landing in federal court, and the other protesters getting civil citations, was quite a surprise," Borum said of his client.

Philadelphia decriminalized minor offenses several weeks before the convention to lessen the odds of the mass arrests that darkened the 2000 Republican National Convention in Philly.

The city planned to open city prisons to mass arrests of protesters, but despite marches by thousands of protesters storming through the city for causes like Sanders, Black Lives Matter and marijuana legalization, not a single arrest was reported until Tuesday night.

A spokeswoman for the Philadelphia U.S. Attorney's Office did not respond to requests for comment on why these protesters were arrested instead of cited.

Sternberg's attorney Paul Hetznecker said he plans to explore "whether or not they were selectively prosecuted" and why the decision was made to "charge them as opposed to following through on the citation they issued."

Sternberg provided a copy of the citation she first got when city police detained them, gave them citations and told them they would be free in a few hours, before they found out they would face federal charges.

"All of a sudden, we were put in the paddy wagon and taken to the federal jail," she recounted, adding that they had no idea they would later be charged with a federal misdemeanor. "Nobody really told us till after we got there."

Borum asserted that these protesters were legitimately exercising their First Amendment rights by trying to get in closer proximity to the convention when they climbed the fence.

"What good are First Amendment rights if you're in the middle of a forest protesting? … They deliberately segregated these protesters," Borum said.

NEW DRIVER'S LICENSE

See the new Mass. driver's license

To remain compliant with updated federal requirements concerning state identification cards and driver's licenses, Massachusetts will begin issuing a new style of licenses in the fall of 2017.

On Tuesday, Gov. Charlie Baker signed into law an update to the current Massachusetts driver's license to eventually make the cards compliant with the federal REAL ID law, which was passed in Washington in 2005 and sets minimum security standards for state-issued IDs, MassLive reported. The new cards will not yet be fully compliant with the REAL ID's requirements, as the state must still complete further technology and security upgrades.

"The security standards and proper federal documentation requirements set out in this bill are imperative as the [RMV] begins the gradual process of implementation so credential holders may continue to board domestic flights and enter federal buildings in the coming years," Gov. Baker said in a statement quoted by MassLive.

The new licenses will be phased in over the next five years, according to WHDH. JASON NUCKOLLS

BPD promises 'thorough investigation' after boy found dead at Carson Beach

Authorities are promising an extensive investigation into the death of a 7-year-old boy who went missing from a city-run day camp and was subsequently found dead in the water near Carson Beach.

Around 2 p.m. on Tuesday, Kyzr Willis went missing from the day camp he was attending at Curley Community Center near Carson Beach in South Boston, NECN reported. His body was found about five hours later.

"We found the young boy in the water, unfortunately, and he was declared deceased," NECN, in a separate report, quoted Police Commissioner William Evans, who also said that Willis had left the area around the community center on foot for unknown reasons.

"This is the worst part of our job, dealing with a tragic death like this, and again, we'll conduct a thorough investigation, but right now let's all pray for the family," Evans was quoted by Fox25.

Police have not yet given details on how Willis managed to remain unnoticed by staff members as he walked away from the Curley Community Center day camp, which is run by the Boston Centers for Youth and Families, the Boston Globe added.

"I will be working closely with Boston Centers for Youth and Families and the Boston Police Department until we learn exactly what happened," Mayor Marty Walsh said in a statement quoted by Fox25. "My heart is broken for the Willis family, and my thoughts and prayers will be with them."

Termination of late-night MBTA service draws federal complaint

MBTA night service NICOLAUS CZARNECKI

Boston-area advocacy groups are now alleging in a federal complaint that the MBTA violated civil rights guidelines by not considering the impact on low-income and minority riders when it decided to end its late-night service.

In the complaint filed on Tuesday, three groups – the Conservation Law Foundation, Alternatives for Community and Environment, and the Greater Four Corners Action Coalition – accused the MBTA of using flawed data in its "equity analysis," which is a federally required examination of whether terminating a specific service would affect low-income or minority riders more than the general public, Boston.com reported.

"This use of overly broad population data allowed the MBTA to conclude that the cancellation of late-night service would have no disparate or disproportionate impact," the complaint was quoted by Boston.com.

Concluding that late-night service was not "cost-effective," the MBTA's fiscal control board voted to end the service in February, WCVB reported.

Without late-night service, most of the last trips on the T now take place between midnight and 1 a.m. on a daily basis, according to the transit agency's website.

"Some of the T's most vulnerable customers were affected by the termination of late-night service," Rafael Mares, a vice president with the Conservation Law Foundation, was quoted by the Boston Globe. "The service that's so important for late-night shift workers has been terminated since March, and nothing else has been put in place."

Despite the complaint, the Federal Transit Administration told the MBTA that their analysis was "properly documented and has met their requirements," MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said to WCVB.

BRIEF

Services promise growth for Apple

Though Apple Inc. is selling enough iPhones to keep investors happy for now, the world's most valuable publicly traded company is set increasingly to rely on its apps and services to drive growth.

Apple's services business alone — which includes the App Store, Apple Pay and iCloud — will be "the size of a Fortune 100 company next year," Chief Executive Tim Cook said.

Revenue from the business rose 19 percent to about $6 billion for the third quarter, eclipsing sales of iPads and Mac computers for the second consecutive quarter.

The company reported higher-than-expected iPhone sales, though they declined for the second straight quarter.

As iPhone sales level off, Apple can utilize its existing base of users to wring more money out of its higher-margin services business, several analysts said.

With one billion devices in the hands of consumers, the size of Apple's installed base suggests it has plenty of room to grow in services. Services also promise a recurring revenue stream, unlike hardware sales.

"The growing iPhone installed base could enable Apple to grow its higher-margin services business through additional iTunes, apps and software sales, as well as through services such as Apple Pay and Apple streaming music service," Canaccord Genuity analyst Michael Walkley said.

At least six analysts raised their price targets on Apple's stock. Raymond James analyst Tavis McCourt raised his rating to "outperform" from "market perform" and initiated a $129 target. The median price target on the stock is $120. REUTERS

French government faces security criticisms after church attack

France's government faced criticism of its security record on Wednesday in the wake of revelations that one of the assailants who slit the throat of a priest at a church altar was a known would-be jihadist under police surveillance.

President Francois Hollande met interfaith leaders in an effort to promote national unity. But his predecessor and potential opponent in a presidential election next year, Nicolas Sarkozy, said the government must take stronger steps to track known Islamist sympathizers.

Tuesday's attackers interrupted a church service, forced 85-year-old Roman Catholic priest Father Jacques Hamel to his knees at the altar and slit his throat. As they came out of the church shouting "Allahu akbar" ("God is Greatest"), they were shot and killed by police.

The attack came less that two weeks after another suspected Islamist drove a truck into a Bastille Day crowd, killing 84 people. Opposition politicians have responded to the attacks with strong criticism of the Socialist government's security record, unlike last year, when they made a show of unity after gunmen and bombers killed 130 people in Paris in November and attacked a satirical newspaper in January.

"All this violence and barbarism has paralyzed the French left since January 2015," Sarkozy, who is expected to enter a conservative primary for next year's presidential election, told Le Monde newspaper. "It has lost its bearings and is clinging to a mindset that is out of touch with reality."

With some conservative politicians warning of a "war of religions," Hollande sought to head off divisions in a meeting with Christian, Jewish, Muslim and Buddhist leaders. REUTERS

Study: Climate change risk threatens 18 military sites

Nonprofit group the Union of Concerned Scientists analyzed 18 military installations that represent more than 120 coastal bases nationwide to weigh the impact of climate change on their operations.

Naval Air Station Key West in Key West, Florida. GETTY IMAGES

Rising sea levels due to hurricanes and tidal flooding intensified by climate change will put military bases along the East Coast and Gulf Coast at risk, according to a report released on Wednesday.

Faster rates of sea level rises in the second half of this century could mean that tidal flooding will become a daily occurrence for some installations, pushing useable land needed for military training and testing into tidal zones, said the report titled "The U.S. Military on the Front Lines of Rising Seas."

By 2050, most of these sites will be hit by more than 10 times the number of floods than at present, the report said, and at least half of them will experience daily floods.

Four of those — including the Naval Air Station in Key West, Florida, and the Marine Corps recruit depot in South Carolina — could lose between 75 and 95 percent of their land in this century.

The report said the Pentagon already recognizes the threat of climate change on its military installations but warned that more resources and monitoring systems are needed to boost preparedness.

But last month, the House Appropriations Committee passed an amendment that blocked funding for the Pentagon's climate adaptation strategy.

"Our defense leadership has a special responsibility to protect the sites that hundreds of thousands of Americans depend on for their livelihoods and millions depend on for national security," the report said.

Julia Stiles returns as government technician-turned-radical Nicky Parsons in "Jason Bourne." JASIN BOLAND

Julia Stiles flexes her muscles

THE FUN STARTS HERE

In "Jason Bourne," the actress plays a woman who's not just there to make out with the hero.

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Julia Stiles has something to brag about: She's the only actor who's been in all of the "Bourne" movies that feature Matt Damon (other than Matt Damon himself, that is). Her character has changed a lot, too. When we met her in "The Bourne Identity," Nicky Parsons was a mere technician working for a shadowy part of the government. By "Ultimatum" she was on the run with Bourne. When we reunite with her in the new "Jason Bourne," she's essentially Edward Snowden, looking to leak files that expose a corrupt agency. Stiles, 35, says the films are no mere action movies, but commentaries on today's fraught world.

Over the four films she's been in, Nicky has dramatically evolved. Now she's a radical.

What I liked about this installment is Nicky's involvement is very different. She's a lot more active. She's not just taking orders or being obedient or reactive. She's been kind of in the wings until now. Rather than just running for her life, she's trying to take control and become incredibly rebellious and dissident.

And she's still not remotely a token love interest, which is unusual.

Absolutely. The two female characters in this film never once stop in the middle of the action to make out with the leading man. That's very different from these types of movies.

Strong female characters who aren't defined by men are a little more on the rise these days.

I do think the climate is changing. Audiences have expressed interest in seeing other types of roles for women. But honestly, I'm a little sick of people denying roles for women that are the mother or the girlfriend or the wife. Those can still be interesting.

There have been complaints about the poster featuring Bourne holding a gun. But these films aren't normal action movies that glorify violence.

The perspective of these movies are not that guns are cool or that violence is something macho and great. It's actually the opposite of that. The main character is struggling with his conscience. He feels the repercussions of what he's done in the past.

Shirley Manson takes back time

Garbage frontwoman Shirley Manson is no stranger to the test of time. The alt-rock band kicked off a "20 Years of Queer" anniversary tour last fall, and released their sixth LP, "Strange Little Birds," in June. With a summer tour to support the release, Manson is ready to get back to doing what she does best with renewed energy — so why does everyone want to talk about her age? Manson has some theories.

There's darkness in "Strange Little Birds." What period of your life do the songs on this album represent?
It's present day, for the most part. I find the great thing is that if you can hop between decades and fantasy or embellish with your imagination, there are times when you can pool from all aspects to complete a story. I feel like for the most part, the record is present, but I time travel on a couple occasions. The very last song on the record is called "Wandering," and it's very much in the moment.

I've read some things you've said about the industry putting pressure on women for aging. Do you think that's an Americanized issue or does it span globally?
It's globally. We've all lost when anyone over the age of 25 isn't fit for the industry. It's not only relative to music; it's a current cultural sickness, in my mind. I think it's important that we listen to young people, because they teach us a lot, but as a culture, we're moving further and further away from the concept of elders. It worries me a little. You have a very different perspective of age. It's a vital one to a healthy community.

Do you think there's media backlash for being vocal about this issue?
It's funny because whenever you speak up about ageism and you're not considered young, you're written off as someone who is complaining. I don't feel I'm complaining. I have a healthy career and I don't feel impeded by people's ageism, but there are many women my age who feel like they're in the garbage pit. You're not. You have superpowers that younger women don't have, and we should value that.

How are you feeling about this obligation to engage in social media these days?
My manager hounded me to start [and] I reluctantly agreed. I found I'm quite good at it and there are aspects I really enjoy. Not all of it. It feels a bit narcissistic and self-serving, but there are parts I find pleasurable. Instagram is a garden of hidden delights.

Oh, it's a rabbit hole for sure. Who do you follow?
There's something quite wrong with me. [Laughs] I'm one of those people who is obsessed with Cats of Instagram and Cute Emergency. I could look at it endlessly. I find solace in the royal beast.

"Jason Bourne"

Director: Paul Greengrass
Stars: Matt Damon, Alicia Vikander
Rating: PG-13

Matt Damon is older, more weathered but never more ripped in "Jason Bourne." IASIN BOLAND

"Jason Bourne" isn't five minutes old and its hero has knocked out a dude. The series' fifth film, though only fourth with Matt Damon, is quick to establish its bona fides as a brutal, thrilling, worthy new entry. But it's a lie. Despite bringing back its original star and its best director (Paul Greengrass, of "Supremacy" and "Ultimatum"), this is the first of their "Bournes" to not go next-level. It tries to bring back the good old days but comes off like the guy who still wants to shotgun Buds (or "Americas") at 50 while blasting W.A.S.P.

It's a major step-down from "Ultimatum," which is even more obvious since the new one's almost a remake. Most of the big beats are hit, including an early chase in a crowded public space, a mid-film scamper about a twisty city and a dynamite car chase.

But the story is sloppier, noticeably dumber. Bourne is called out of hiding for insufficient reasons, then tries to stop the series' fourth scary old white guy (Tommy Lee Jones). There's also an even more expanded surveillance program, which is opposed by a Mark Zuckerberg type (Riz Ahmed) in too deep with government goons. Yes, this is a movie in which Jason Bourne tries to save Facebook.

Released in 2007, "Ultimatum" was steeped in the sickly climate of the time. Its villains were the types who waged war without oversight or regulation, who talked about only stopping "when we've won," whenever that is. It was a '70s conspiracy thriller modernized and 'roided up.

This one flails about trying to fit Bourne into the age of Obama. When it turns topical, its references to real life ills feel shoe-horned in, inorganic. It does deliver the goods, occasionally, and Greengrass can still deliver nerve-jangling set pieces. With a lesser franchise, it might not be crushing that "Jason Bourne" is a mere disposable time killer.

Accio Potter fans!

Three "Cursed Child" release parties that will spellbind any fan.

NINA JOUNG

Almost 10 years later, bookstores finally get to host another epic midnight party to celebrate the release of "Harry Potter and the Cursed Child." J.K. Rowling, Jack Thorne and John Tiffany's two-part script is the first story in the Potter series written for the stage, and follows our favorite boy wizard some 19 years later, as he and his youngest son, Albus, must face Harry's unforgettable past together.

Just as the story reflects the multiple generations at Hogwarts, these midnight release parties invite fans of all ages to dress up, win prizes and celebrate the newest chapter in the world of witchcraft and wizardry.

1 A follow-up to their epic Tercentenary Theater blowout, Harvard Square once again transforms into Hogwarts Square. The night starts with a real-ish wizard (magician) and an outdoor screening of "The Sorcerer's Stone," before the midnight release where you can get 30 percent off the list price at the Coop. Grendel's Den will serve a Potter-themed drink menu, including a $3 (non-alcoholic) Polyjuice Potion, while the Square's Starbucks adds a Butterbeer Frappuccino for the night. Potterheads will go home with temporary lightning bolt tattoos and round-frame glasses on the house. July 30 at 8 p.m., Harvard Square, Various locations, Cambridge, harvardsquare.com

2 Harry Potter trivia, a costume competition and a fan-fiction open mic put Potterheads' magical skills and fandom to the test at Porter Square Books' "Cursed Child" release party. Fan fiction writers will have a five-minute slot to tell the stories J.K. Rowling left out, (even the author admits Harry and Hermoine should have ended up together) but participants are advised to write for wizards of all ages. July 30 at 10:30 p.m., Porter Square Books, 25 White St., Cambridge, portersquarebooks.com

3 Which house do you belong in? At the Brookline Booksmith release party, attendees will be sorted into houses and can win points via Harry Potter trivia and a scavenger hunt. Children's staff member Clarissa Murphy adds that there will be edible wizard-theme concoctions including Harry Potter-themed crepes from the Paris Creperie. Also, be sure to dress in your house colors or as your favorite character for the photobooth! July 30 at 9 p.m., Brookline Booksmith, 279 Harvard St., Brookline, brooklinebooksmith.com

Step up your charcuterie game

We called in an expert.

Find a wide range of chilld charcuterie at Back Bay's Bar Boulud. PROVIDED

NINA JOUNG
@MetroBOS
nina.joung@metro.us

Charcuterie is an easy party-pleaser, but how do you keep your board light and fresh enough to serve in summer? We asked Parisian Charcutier Tristan Crépin, formerly of Boston's Bar Boulud.

Trade up for terrine

Swap out your salami and confit for terrine, a layered loaf of meat or vegetables that's sliced when served. Tristan's own poulet aux agrumes — a chicken and citrus terrine — is made with chicken legs and summer citrus, and cooked in chicken stock, vegetables and gelatin before it's chilled and formed into a mold. He tops his dish with mint and cilantro for a spreadable that's refreshing, rather than heavy.

Micromanage your meats

Alongside your terrine, Tristan recommends a dried ham like, "Jambon de Bayonne or Ibérico" (go with thicker slices so you don't end up with a "gummy texture") and some saucisson sec, smoked, dry sausages.

For placement, he says, "I keep the terrine on the right side [of a board], the pâté on the left, and the ham in the middle." Keeping the cheeses and meats separate is important, he adds, "So the flavors don't blend unless the guest wants them to." Tristan also advises separating the two when you store leftovers in the fridge to preserve their integrity.

HOT PLATE

Double Chin's Cube Toast

Rachel Raczka eats her way through Boston
rachel.raczka@metro.us

Looks overwhelming, tastes overwhelming. Enjoy! JOEL BENJAMIN

Somewhat hazy, late-night visits to Chinatown are a tradition for Boston area students. There's nothing quite like a steaming plate of crispy, greasy egg rolls and tangles of pork lo mein from New Golden Gate, Peach Farm or Chau Chow City after a long night out. This, in the moment, is heaven, and in a more sober moment, an indulgence worth taking — though combined with other repercussions that follow — you usually wake up with puffy, salt-induced fingers and eyes, feeling worse for wear, despite having eaten what seems like a booze-thirsty feast.

That's where Double Chin comes in. Last winter, sisters Gloria and Emily Chin opened this Asian-fusion shop that serves quirkified versions of neighborhood classics. You can get Craisin-stuffed crab rangoon, or crispy pork katsu on white bread with avocado and bacon, or Spam and taro fries, shoestring-style, served in a repurposed Spam can. And you can get them all until 4 a.m. on Fridays and Saturdays.

The pièce de résistance, if based on Instagram postings alone, must be the Cube Toast. A hollowed-out half loaf of brioche is stuffed with scoops of ice cream, sliced fruit and nuggets of mochi, with slender rods of Pocky sticking out at odd angles. They look adorably deranged — in the best way possible — mostly because they're made up of your dentist's worst nightmares.

The Chin's say the Matcha Ma Call It is the crowd favorite of the four flavors offered, and it's mine, too. There are scoops of green tea ice cream, a dollop of red bean, chewy mochi and a drizzle of Matcha Milk that makes it near impossible not to eat the minute it hits your table. This is great logic because bread, ice cream and a near hazardous amount of sliced fruit are almost guaranteed to prevent a hangover. You know, almost. $12 at Double Chin, 86 Harrison Ave, doublechinbos.com

ARTS, CULTURE, ACTION

Sweet, sweet victory

Berklee-bred Honeysuckle is heading to Lollapalooza.

CARLY OLSON
@carlyolson28
carlyolson@metro.us

This young music trio is only going up. Berklee alumni Holly McGarry ('15), Chris Bloniarz ('15) and current student Benjamin Burns will be bringing their signature contemporary folk sound to this weekend's Lollapalooza music festival in Chicago.

A partnership between Lollapalooza and Berklee gives one standout band the chance to perform on one of the festival's main stages. After applying through the Berklee Popular Music Institute (BPMI), students are selected to perform at summer music festivals across the continent including Electric Daisy Carnival, Made in America and, of course, Lollapalooza. And out of 400 entries, Honeysuckle was chosen to take Lolla's Pepsi stage July 30.

This isn't the first time the trio has received national recognition — they performed at the Newport Folk Festival in 2015 as a Converse Rubber Tracks Artist and were picked by NPR's All Songs Considered as a top 10 favorite musician of 2016 (so far).

We chatted with singer Holly McGarry, who is as humble as she is talented.

How would you describe your sound?
I would describe it as progressive folk. We get a lot of inspiration from traditional American folk and the storytelling process of it all. It's very vocal-harmony driven—folk with kind of a twist.

How do you think Honeysuckle will fit at Lollapalooza?
I know there are only a couple of acoustic acts on the bill and I think it will be nice to bring some variety. There are a couple bluegrass acts and we aren't exactly bluegrass either. I'm hoping the crowd will get excited!

NPR's All Songs Considered called your work "unpretentious and unabashed," "technical" and "mesmerizing." What part of the review meant the most to you as a musician?
The whole thing was really meaningful; especially that one person unraveled our music with so much detail. I like that he pointed out the intricacy of what Ben and Chris do together. They take a lot of time crafting the instrumental parts and the harmonies.

It's nice to know that somebody thinks that we aren't pretentious or selling out either—that's really the opposite of the community-driven values of folk music.

Coming off your other biggest show — last year's Newport Folk Festival —how does it feel to keep getting selected for such notable venues?
It's a huge morale booster. For every band, it's hard to make it work. This is a nice way for the universe to tell you that you have a shot.

Honeysuckle has a few Boston-area shows this month — check them out at facebook.com/honeysuckleband. KNAR BEDIAN

Erik Desmazières: Imaginary Places

The prints of Erik Desmazières provoke the same surreal architectural fascination as M.C. Escher's amusing illusions and impossible scenes. But Desmazières goes beyond Escher's playful games of perception, also created richly evocative scenes of sci-fi/fantasy worlds, like tantalizing illustrations from novels that will never be written.

"Bullitt"/"The Getaway"

This double feature stars the great action hero of the '60s and '70s Steve McQueen. In, 1968's "Bullitt," McQueen is a cop whose battle with the mob culminates in a legendary car chase. It's followed by 1972's "The Getaway," which finds McQueen on the other side of the law, speeding toward Mexico with his wife/accomplice after an imperfectly executed bank heist.

Dig into Philly's hidden history

There's more to learn about than the Revolutionary War.

Fodor's Travel

Philadelphia isn't short on historic sites; anyone who's passed through has seen the main ones like Independence Hall and the Liberty Bell. But there are lots of newer or lesser-known parks, museums and even a haunted fort you may not have heard about yet. ADAM ERACE

Franklin Delano Roosevelt Park

Frederick Law Olmsted is best known as the designer of Central Park. His sons, Frederick Jr. and John Charles, followed in their father's landscape architecture footsteps by founding the Olmsted Bros. firm, which created the high-profile Franklin Delano Roosevelt Park in South Philly. Designed in the decade leading up to the 1926 Sesquicentennial Exposition, it's colloquially known as "The Lakes" for its network of channels and lagoons, and contains numerous historical structures, including the castle-like American Swedish Historical Museum.

Sphinx of Ramesses II

The University of Pennsylvania Museum of Archaeology & Anthropology sits behind a high brick wall on the eastern fringe of Penn's campus. It's a massive but elegant compound with terracotta roofs, manicured hedgerows, a reflecting pool and a 15-ton red granite sphinx. The centerpiece of the museum's Egyptian gallery, the sphinx is from Egypt's 19th dynasty and absolutely commands the room.

Edgar Allan Poe House

While "The Raven" poet is most closely associated with Baltimore, Edgar Allan Poe lived in Philly for about six years. He had several homes in the city, only one remains: a red brick structure with white shutters and a white picket fence on North Seventh Street. This was the final home Poe, his wife and mother-in-law inhabited before moving to New York in 1844. Tour the home, learn about Poe, or even curl up with a creepy story in the reading room.

Mummers Museum
While not without controversy or immune to changing tastes, the Mummers are one of Philly's most recognizable traditions, dating back to the city's earliest settlers, the Swedes. The Mummers are men and women from clubhouses around the city and suburbs who march in the annual New Year's Day Parade. Each group puts on themed performances along the parade route or at the Convention Center that night, vying to outdo one another's lavish costumes and choreography.

Fort Mifflin

Strategically positioned near the junction of the Delaware and Schuylkill rivers, Fort Mifflin played a key role in the Revolutionary War, its garrison charged with making trouble for the British Navy to buy time for Gen. George Washington and his men to arrive safely at Valley Forge. The fort also played parts in the Civil and World wars, which you can learn all about at the interactive exhibits and historical reenactments. Fort Mifflin is also one of the most haunted sites in the country and offers a robust roster of paranormal programs.

Bartram's Garden

In the early 18th century, royal botanist John Bartram greened the gardens of England's King George III with exotic flora from the East Coast of the soon-to-be U.S. Today, Bartram's Garden in West Philly survives as the oldest botanical garden in the country. Comprising 45 acres along the banks of the Schuylkill River, this National Historic Landmark is a great, lesser-known site to visit in the city; it's open year-round and admission is free. You can tour the restored houses and barn, learn about native medicinal plants and idle under North America's oldest ginkgo tree.

Brighton up your summer

Life in Brighton revolves around the beach. GETTY IMAGES

Visit Britain's favorite seaside town.

Fodor's Travel

For a small city, Brighton packs a big personality. Londoners and other English travelers love escaping here for its pretty pebble beach, pier and seaside recreation. But the rest of the world is slowly discovering that Brighton makes for an easygoing, easy-to-love waterfront hub. Plus, Brighton is a mere 50 minutes south by rail from London.

KELSY CHALMIN

Royal Pavilion

The ornate onion domes and decorative minarets are eye-catching enough today, so it's hard to imagine just how wondrous they must have seemed when the Royal Pavilion first opened nearly two centuries ago. But that was indeed the desired effect for King George IV, who had it erected with the help of famed architect John Nash. Today, the Oriental and Indo-Saracenic architecture both inside and outside are some of Brighton's most mesmerizing — if bewildering — sights.

The countryside

From its prime location on the banks of the English Channel, day trips to other parts of lush Sussex County are a pleasant diversion from Brighton's bustle. To the east, Beachy Head's dramatic chalk cliffs are the tallest in England, and the nearby town of Eastbourne is a lovely area for lunch. Venture west to explore the ancient Roman ruins of Fishbourne in Chichester, or just rent a car and enjoy the drive through the rolling green English countryside.

Brighton Pier

Since 1899, the 2.5-acre Brighton Pier has been a starring attraction for those heading to Brighton for fun and relaxation. While it's evolved through the decades, the historic pier still retains much of its vintage character and wrought-iron details, as well as its now-modern rides and games. Head here for a whirl on the eye-popping rainbow carousel, to sip a drink at the Victorian beer hall or just to pause over the English Channel and catch the sunset.

The waterfront

The scenic waterfront stretch of Brighton and Hove hug the coast of the English Channel. But beyond long walks and pretty bike rides, beachy attractions like the Sea Life Centre and 150-foot-tall Brighton Wheel are great additions for family fun. Don't miss a ride on Volk's Electric Railway, the oldest operating electric railway in the world.

Nightlife

Local legend has it that there are at least 365 pubs in Brighton and its neighboring town of Hove — enough to drink at a different one every day of the year. That may be true, but finding the perfect place to sip an ale or local cider, perhaps with a side of shepherd's pie, is the real challenge. Head to the classic Camelford Arms or more nouveau-style The Better Half for quality pub time. For the town's huge LGBT population, there's Marlborough Pub & Theatre, though many others are easily found around town — especially along St. James' Street and the waterfront in the Kemptown neighborhood.

OPINION

For now, it's all about Jimmy Garoppolo. Or, at least, it needs to be.

Thanks to the absurdity that was Deflategate, Tom Brady will serve a four-game suspension to begin the regular season. Brady won't be allowed at Gillette Stadium, and he can't have any contact with teammates or coaches during those four weeks. However, he can fully participate in preseason games and training camp, which begins this week.

That doesn't mean Brady should be the top dog, though.

At first, that statement seems blasphemous. As if to ask, "What do you mean one of the greatest quarterbacks of all time shouldn't roll with the '1s' throughout training camp and preseason?"

Look, let's get something out of the way now: Brady is not going to lose his job to Garoppolo, Jacoby Brissett, or any other veteran quarterback that the Patriots might bring in to camp. Garoppolo could go 4-0 and look like an absolute stud, but he won't steal Brady's job.

At the same time, the Patriots need to do everything in their power to make sure Garoppolo is prepared enough to at least believe he can win every game he starts. The better they start, the easier it will be for Brady to work his way back into the fold in Week 5 in Cleveland, without having to try and dig the team out of an insurmountable hole.

And for any talk about Brady's ego possibly taking over and demanding he practices and plays with the first-team offense right now, I'm willing to bet he understands the situation at hand, which is simple: barring something unforeseen, Garoppolo will be the Patriots' starting quarterback in the first four weeks of the regular season.

So how do you manage your quarterbacks leading into Week 1 in Arizona on Sept. 11? That answer is also simple: The Patriots need to treat Garoppolo as the top dog throughout training camp and the preseason.

The most common response to that is, "Brady won't want to practice as the backup." In a vacuum, you're right. Brady has earned the right to get his regular reps in with the first team, because, after all, when he returns in Week 5, he'll be the guy who the Patriots once again ask to take them to the Super Bowl.

Brady knows just how important those first four games are, given that three of them are at home. Does he have an ego? Sure. Who doesn't? But Brady has never let his ego get in the way of winning. And if the Patriots want to get to the playoffs and win a championship again this year, then even Brady has to understand that Garoppolo's preparation is the most important thing for the team between now and Week 1.

That preparation for Garoppolo needs to be with the first-team offense, which would certainly take away from Brady's training camp reps. But that's just the way it has to be.

Will Brady have some rust when he returns? I assume so. That would seem to be nothing more than human nature. But would you rather see a rusty Brady in Week 5, or an unprepared Garoppolo in Weeks 1-4?

That answer, too, is simple. I'd take a rusty Brady over most starting NFL quarterbacks when they're at their best. And I'm willing to bet Bill Belichick would too.

Now, I'm not saying Brady should just sit on the sideline and do nothing. He'll get some work in. But he can't be the priority. Not right now. That has to be Garoppolo. If anything, it's a vote of confidence in Brady, that, he's been so good for so long, he'll be able to jump right back into the swing of things and lead the Patriots offense to regular-season and playoff wins, even without much work in camp.

Brady is still the top dog in New England. But for right now, training camp needs to be all about Garoppolo.

Taurus Put your emotions aside and become a participant. The experience and connections you gain will be worth your while. Don't give in to someone using emotional tactics.

Gemini Play it safe and ask questions if you are in doubt. Common sense should tell you who is offering you the truth and who isn't. What you discover will help bring about personal change.

Cancer Dream on and proceed to make your dreams a reality. Carve out a working space in your home that is conducive to creativity and personal growth.

Leo Letting emotional problems seep into your professional life will not lead to advancement. Offer your skills and a positive attitude, and confront domestic issues with peace and love.

Virgo If you search for information, you will discover something that will clear up confusion about a personal matter. Your effort to excel will pay off.

Libra Speak up on behalf of someone who cannot do so for him- or herself. Your ability to offer a reasonable alternative will make you a hero. Love should be a joyful end to a hectic day.

Scorpio Jealousy will stand in your way. Step back and consider whether it's worth getting upset over something you cannot change. Focus on what you can do, not on what you cannot.

Sagittarius A healthier lifestyle will save you from slipping into bad habits. Demonstrating discipline and a desire to be your best is favored. Love yourself and the people who support you.

Capricorn You need to move forward, regardless of what others do. An unpredictable situation is best handled with caution. Rely on your experience to guide you.

Aquarius Good fortune will develop through patience, love and understanding. If you are sincere and consistent in your treatment of others, you will enhance your relationships.

Pisces Listen to what's being said and make adjustments based on what works. Trust in your knowledge, intuition and ability to visualize. Don't let emotions lead you astray. EUGENIA LAST
